Not Your Father's Voc Ed: The Value of CTE for All Students August 10, 2016

New high school graduates are enrolling in college in unprecedented numbers and little wonder why: Data consistently shows that, overall, going to college produces better economic and social outcomes for young people compared to their peers who never enter postsecondary institutions. Yet there are non-college goers who fare as well, and in many cases better, than their college-going peers. New research from NSBA's Center for Public Education shows that the right preparation in high school- one that combines high-level academics with modernized CTE- yields benefits in terms of wages and good jobs at age 26 that compete with four-year degree holders. Moreover, the benefits convey to college goers, too. Join CPE director Patte Barth who will discuss the findings and how school divisions can help all students prepare for a better future.

Speaker: Patte Barth, Director, Center for Public Education, NSBA
Cost: $135/connection

Date and Time: August 10, 2016, 11AM-12PM
